1. Welcome to the first

For those of you who have been signed up for a while to receive this newsletter, you've probably been wondering where it's been. Actually, it's been on a back burner, simmering on it's own. This would be the very first edition, and the spot where I welcome you to it.

2. Jack and Jill

The latest project I've been working on has been for a few spots for the November/December issue of Jack and Jill magazine. The illustrations are for a winter activities quiz and show kids sled riding, skiing, building snow forts, things like that.

My first work for them was for their summer issue (July/August) and included illustrations for an article called, "Surviving Family Road Trips." Below you'll find a link to my blog page where I've posted the main image from the article.

3. Back to school

The image (titled "Skydiving School") on the tote bag to the left of this newsletter won an honorable mention in a Society of Children's Book Writers and Illustrators illustration competition, and is totally available for purchase in my CafePress store.

Don't forget to visit my online store, and my Web site, and good luck with all that fun back-to-school stuff.
